Mrs. Asifi's Tireless Efforts in Brining Education to the Most Underprivileged Afghan Refugee Girls

The UNHCR Nansen Refugee Award Laureate, Aqeela Asifi has said that investing in education means investing in the future of a nation, without which no country could develop and prosper.

She was addressing a gathering organized in her honor by the UN Refugee Agency and its partner agency WESS at the University of Balochistan. The event was held to pay tribute to Mrs. Asifi's tireless efforts in bringing education to some of the most underprivileged Afghan Refugee girls. Mrs. Asifi was on a three day mission to Balochistan for the first time. Her visit was aimed at highlighting the importance of education of children in exile. During her stay, she also visited Saranan Refugee Village, where she held meetings with community elders, teachers, students and their parents.

In her interaction with refugee teachers and parents, Mrs. Asifi underlined that children and youth who are not in schools, do not benefit from their intertionally established right to basic education and are at greater risk of exploitation, including early marriage and child labour.

On the last day of her visit Aqeela Asifi attended an event at the University of Balochistan. Asifi in her address noted that an educational system should not only be focusing on teaching young people how to make a living but also teach them how to make a life. "Only then we would achieve our objective of a progressive society." She added.

Also present at the occasion were Vice Chancellor, Prof. Dr. Javed Iqbal, Aghan Consul General Waheedullah Momand, Secretary Education Balochsitan Saboor Kakar and Chief Executive WESS, Pervez Iqbal and a huge number of students.

Commissioner Afghan Refugees in Balochistan, Brig (Retd.) Masud Ahmed in his speech also highlighted the importance of giving refugee children access to education. He said, "Educated refugees provide leadership in displacement situations and in rebuilding communities, recovering from conflict. Education provides knowledge and skill development that strengthen the capacity of our future generation to be agents of social transformation". Speaking at the occasion, Dinesh Shrestha, Head of UNHCR in Balochistan said, that ensuring the provision of education to refugee children is a core component of UNHCR's work both nationally and internationally. "Quality education that inculcates relevant skills and knowledge enables refugees to lives and builds skills of self-reliance." He added.
