Personal Information

There is a place on the outskirts of civilization in the outer periphery of a developing country, where schools are many makeshift places where children gather to learn, where access to a modern healthcare system is as elusive as the pursuit of the Grail. A place where people walk miles to fetch water for daily use, where women are still confined to the four walls of the house and the concept of justice is still in the purview of local tribal elites. That place is my home. In such circumstances, I have completed my studies and now I am working as a Lecturer where I taught to undergraduate and master students. Besides teaching, I have supervised 8 research projects of my MPhil. in Education Students. Currently, I am pursuing my Ph.D. in Educational Research.
